Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions.

According to sociologists, there are several different ways in which a person may become recognized as the leader of a social group in the United States. In the family, traditional cultural patterns confer leadership on one or both of the parents. In other cases, such as friendship groups, one or more persons may gradually emerge as leaders, although there is no formal process of selection. In larger groups, leaders are usually chosen formally through election or recruitment.

Although leaders are often thought to be people with unusual personal ability, decades of research have failed to produce consistent evidence that there is any category of "natural leaders". It seems that there is no set of personal qualities that all leaders have in common; rather, virtually any person may be recognized as a leader if the person has qualities that meet the needs of that particular group.

Furthermore, although it is commonly supposed that social groups have a single leader, research suggests that there are typically two different leadership roles that are held by different individuals. Instrumental leadership emphasizes the completion of tasks by a social group. Group members look to instrumental leaders to get things done. Expressive leadership, on the other hand, emphasizes the collective well-being of a social group's members. Expressive leaders are less concerned with the overall goals of the group than with providing emotional support to group members and attempting to minimize tension and conflict among them. Group members expect expressive leaders to maintain stable relationships within the group and provide support to individual members.

Instrumental leaders are likely to have a rather secondary relationship to other group members. They give orders and may discipline group members who inhibit attainment of the group's goals. Expressive leaders cultivate a more personal or primary relationship to others in the group. They offer sympathy when someone experiences difficulties or is subjected to discipline, are quick to lighten a serious moment with humor, and try to resolve issues that threaten to divide the group. As the differences in these two roles suggest, expressive leaders generally receive more personal affection from group members; instrumental leaders, if they are successful in promoting group goals, may enjoy a more distant respect.

Question 34. What does the passage mainly discuss?
A. The problems faced by leaders
B. The roles of leaders in social groups
C. The relationship between leaders of social groups
D. How social groups determine who will lead them

A. there is no proof that "natural leaders" exist
B. "natural leaders" share a similar set of characteristics
C. "natural leaders" are easily accepted by the members of a social group
D. few people qualify as "natural leaders"

Question 37. Which of the following statements about leadership can be inferred from paragraph 2?
A. Most people desire to be leaders but can produce little evidence of their qualifications.
B. A person can best learn how to be an effective leader by doing research on leadership.
C. Few people succeed in sharing a leadership role with another person.
D. A person who is an effective leader of a particular group may not be an effective leader in another group.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions from.

Every day, millions of shoppers hit the stores in full force - both online and on foot - searching excitedly for the perfect gifts. Last year, Americans spent over $30 billion at retail stores in the month of December alone. Aside from purchasing holiday gifts, most people regularly buy presents for other occasions throughout the year, including weddings, birthdays, anniversaries, graduations, and baby showers. This frequent experience of gift-giving can engender ambivalent feelings in gift-givers. Many relish the opportunity to buy presents because gift-giving offers a powerful means to build stronger bonds with one's closest peers. At the same time, many dread the thought of buying gifts; they worry that their purchases will disappoint, rather than delight, the intended recipients.

Anthropologists describe gift-giving as a positive social process, serving various political, religious, and psychological functions. Economists, however, offer a less favorable view. According to Waldfogel (1993), gift-giving represents an objective waste of resources. People buy gifts that recipients would not choose to buy on their own, or at least not spend as much money to purchase (a phenomenon referred to as "the deadweight loss of Christmas"). This "deadweight loss" suggests that gift-givers are not very good at predicting what gifts others will appreciate. That in itself is not surprising to social psychologists. Research has found that people often struggle to take account of others' perspectives, their insights are subject to egocentrism, social projection, and multiple attribution errors. What is surprising is that gift-givers have considerable experience acting as both gift-givers and gift-recipients, but nevertheless, tend to overspend each time they set out to purchase a meaningful gift.

In the present research, we propose a unique psychological explanation for this overspending problem, i.e. that gift-givers equate how much they spend with how much recipients will appreciate the gift (the more expensive the gift, the stronger the gift-recipient's feelings of appreciation). Although a link between gift price and feelings of appreciation might seem intuitive to gift-givers, such an assumption may be unfounded. Indeed, we suggest that gift-recipients will be less likely to base their feelings of appreciation on the magnitude of a gift than givers assume.

Why do gift-givers assume that gift price is closely linked to gift-recipients' feelings of appreciation? Perhaps givers believe that bigger (that is, more expensive) gifts convey stronger signals of thoughtfulness and consideration. According to Camerer (1988) and others, gift-giving represents a symbolic ritual, whereby gift-givers attempt to signal their positive attitudes toward the intended recipients and their willingness to invest resources in a future relationship. In this sense, gift-givers may be motivated to spend more money on a gift in order to send a "stronger signal" to their intended recipients. As for gift-recipients, they may not construe smaller or larger gifts as representing smaller or larger signals of thoughtfulness and consideration.

Question 42. What is the main idea discussed in the passage?
A. Gift-giving may have certain drawbacks alongside its positive qualities.
B. Gift-giving, despite its uneconomical downsides, cultivates a positive social process.
C. Gift-recipients are widely acknowledged as considerably experienced in gift-giving.
D. Gifts can serve as implicit signals of thoughtfulness and consideration.

Question 43. In paragraph 1, the word "ambivalent" most nearly means _____.
A. conflicted B. unrealistic C. apprehensive D. supportive

A. functions as a form of self-expression B. can serve to strengthen a relationship
C. requires the gift-recipients to share the same opinion D. is an inexpensive way to show appreciation

Question 45. The author most likely uses the examples of gift-giving occasions in paragraph 1 to highlight the _____.
A. recent increase in the amount of money spent on gifts B. number of special occasions involving gift-giving
C. anxiety gift-shopping causes for consumers D. regularity with which people shop for gifts

Question 46. The word "many" in line 6 paragraph 1 refers to _____.
